

Newspaper Chooses Texas Co-ed as First Woman Editor

One of Texas' loveliest roses is blossoming this semester on the campus of El Camino College. And this rose is not yellow. A climber, the rose appears in the personable person of Joyce Huffman, a Dallas coed who enrolled at El Camino in September and became an early bloomer. Appearing in the office of the college newspaper, the Warhoop, a few days before the opening classes, Miss Huffman was assigned as a reporter—until publication of the second issue, when she grew to the responsible post of city editor. Now in her second semester as a Warrior, the transplanted Texan is the first woman editor-in-chief in college history. "And she's one of the best bloomin' editors I know," K. Lyne O'Dell, commissioner of publications at El Camino, attests. Finding a scarcity of experienced editors on her staff when the semester opened, the flower of Texas womanhood gave way to pressure and took on dual responsibility of continuing her duties as city editor as well as overseeing the entire operation of the only eight column junior college weekly in Southern California.

FIRST WOMAN EDITOR of the El Camino College Warhoop is Miss Joyce Huffman, a transplanted Texan, who is as much at home in newspaper and print shop offices as she is on the range.

city, and of the National Honor Society, maintaining an A average throughout her four-year high school career. She also served as a band majorette for four years during prep days. The coed will continue on the honor circuit at El Camino, where she will be initiated into membership of Beta Phi Gamma, national junior college honor journalism society in the near future. She won honors for herself and the college recently in Fresno, when, competing with representatives of 27 colleges, she won third place honors in news writing. The Warhoop took sweepstakes awards at the University of Redlands during the past week for make-up and general layout, for which Miss Huffman has been largely responsible during the spring and fall semesters.
